INVADER

Humanity is being invaded by an enemy that cannot defeat it.

An extraterrestrial race has come to Earth with one objective: claim the planet as its new home. Their technology is far beyond anything humanity possesses, but there is one fundamental problem with their conquest.

They are physically weaker than humans.

Earth's environment is hostile to them, their bodies are poorly suited for prolonged survival on the planet, and in direct physical confrontation, an ordinary human can overpower them.

So the Invaders choose another solution.

Instead of exterminating humanity themselves, they intend to create its replacement.

Through experiments combining human and alien biology, the Invaders begin producing hybrids: beings possessing the physical advantages necessary to survive on Earth while retaining the biological characteristics of their creators. Once perfected, this new race will multiply, eliminate humanity and inherit the planet for them.

But their experiments continue to fail.

Until they discover Mirai.

Among the Invaders, she is known simply as the Female.

For reasons they do not understand—or refuse to reveal—Mirai is the only known human capable of giving birth to perfect hybrids. Capturing her becomes essential to completing the invasion.

Standing between them and Mirai is Mitsui, a Japanese former delinquent who has spent years locked away from society.

Mitsui possesses an ability he has never fully understood: he can see the future.

When Mirai becomes the central target of the invasion, Mitsui is dragged into a hidden war between humanity and the extraterrestrial forces already operating on Earth. Armed with an experimental combat suit built from a combination of human and alien technology, he becomes capable of fighting an enemy whose technological superiority should make resistance impossible.

The suit transforms Mitsui into a high-speed urban combatant. Cables, propulsion systems and specialized weapons allow him to launch himself between buildings, attack from impossible angles and fight both Invaders and their increasingly dangerous hybrid creations.

But the technology alone isn't what makes Mitsui dangerous.

He can see what happens before it happens.

His mission begins simply: find Mirai before the Invaders do, rescue her, and prevent them from creating the species that will replace mankind.

But the deeper Mitsui enters the war, the less simple the invasion becomes.

Why Mirai can produce perfect hybrids, why Mitsui can see the future, why the Invaders chose Earth, and why their arrival seems connected to events that began long before the invasion are questions whose answers have been deliberately buried.

Mitsui believes he is fighting to prevent humanity's extinction.

He does not yet understand what the invasion actually is.
